Clonidine suppresses the dehiscence of wet and dry berkeley clamp wounds. Clonidine (1 microgram/kg) suppressed the increase in wet weight and collagen content of skin wounds (0.5 cm2) closed with the Berkeley wet/dry clamp. Skin wounds closed with the clamp were associated with a marked increase in stress proteins, induced by the stress of being cut to the amount required for initiating healing, thereby causing an increase in collagen content and a delay in epithelialisation. However, exposure of wounds to clonidine suppressed both the increase in wet weight and collagen content of the skin wounds. Clonidine (4 micrograms/kg) suppressed the increase in stress proteins also, and in addition caused a reduction in collagen content. Wound closure was initiated earlier than in the controls, as shown by a shorter epithelialisation period. Clonidine (1 microgram/kg) was not associated with any gross changes in blood flow or perfusion. Clonidine (4 micrograms/kg) suppressed the increase in blood flow and perfusion seen after skin wounding.Transformation of tyrosine-phosphorylated phosphoproteins in Saccharomyces cerevisiae. A method was developed in which the tyrosine phosphorylation status of cellular proteins could be monitored by Western blotting with phosphotyrosine antibodies. The technique was employed to detect the tyrosine-phosphorylated (hereinafter referred to as Tyr-P) proteins in yeast cells transformed with the ERE1 or the 2xEJLA expression vectors. The expression of both the ERE1 and the 2xEJLA plasmids resulted in an overall increase in the Tyr-P proteins in the transformed cells. The size distribution of the Tyr-P proteins was similar in the two transformed cell lines. Although the majority of the Tyr-P proteins (62.3%) were of apparent molecular mass (Mr) 90 kDa, Tyr-P proteins of 62, 44, 32, 26, 14 and 11 kDa were also observed. In addition, a new Tyr-P species of apparent Mr 60 kDa was observed. The analysis of the tyrosine-phosphorylation status of the ERE1-transformed cells at different stages of growth indicated that two of the low Mr Tyr-P proteins observed in exponentially growing cells were of higher Mr (86 and 90 kDa) during the decline phase of the growth cycle
